In 2003, Germany launched their pfand deposit system, this is beyond a shadow of a doubt one of the most ideal systems where consumers can become responsible for their waste.

I was living in Germany for about two years as a student, streets were spotless of rubbish cans and bottles would always be recycled by everybody.

I wholly welcome a change to this method. Recycling of bottles needs to be part of community living not pushed to the outskirts of a town.

I think now it is more in the public mindset to recycle, if we had bins with three types of waste: Black Refuse; Green Dry recycle; Brown Compost that this would also aid our recycling endeavours.

Kind Regards
