To whom it may concern,

It is my view that the plan for Ireland to back load its carbon credits is irresponsible and dangerous. The climate is changing before our eyes and Madagascar has had what is considered to be the first climate change induced famine.

We all share the sky and Ireland has an opportunity to lead by example in making our carbon credits budget more ambitious and aim not to just to achieve our goals but to exceed them. 7% reduction is not enough.

Governments around the world have been kicking the can down the road for long enough. The road is now running out.

Yours,
