To whom it may concern,

Ireland has a duty to its citizens to treat the climate crisis with the seriousness and concern it is due - understanding the scale of the action required as we do.

By under-committing to cuts of less than 7.1% for the forthcoming periods we are not doing our fair share to ameliorate the impact of the crisis on our own people and the world - nor living up to our legal obligations.

I expect better of us and urge you to reconsider this course of action.

Regards,
